Patten, general manager of the Topeka Rajiway company, said this afternoon:

These emergency busses have been operated solely for accommodation of the Oakland people, and are maintained at a dead loss to the street railway, and if the practice of spreading tacks is to be continued, it means that we will simply be compelled to discontinue the busses, causing the traffic to pass over the railway tracks under the Sixth street viaduct, until the viaduct is completed. This, I think, will be about the middle of May. We do not for one moment be leve that any resident of Oakland has been distributing tacks for the benefit of the company.
